

The Time is Out of Joint: Leading well to set it right

Do you work within a company, or – like me – do you support companies as an advisor or consultant? More generally, are you interested in understanding the implications for enterprise of the current economic discontinuities – and are up for a good networking event?

Please join me at a free talk on 'The Time is Out of Joint: Leading well to set it right' by David Thompson on 29 April in Central London.

David is one of the most dynamic presenters I know. The founder of Total Awareness Coaching (www.totalawarenesscoaching.com), he has been a consultant to business leaders in the US, UK and Europe for more than 15 years. In this, he builds on his extensive experience in the theatre as an actor, director and producer. David's deep knowledge of Shakespeare's plays is sure to illuminate trends in today's business climate in fresh and unexpected ways. In "The Time is Out of Joint" David will explore the patterns of thought, word and action that define outstanding leadership in the midst of turmoil.

Back in February, over 100 of us gathered for the first event in this series, a presentation by Belden Menkus (Brown '78, MIT '84) called "The Age of Discontinuity: The New Leadership Agenda." We expect that "The Time is Out of Joint" will continue and extend those conversations, as David asks: how can leaders shape a future of possibility when faced by chaos and confusion?

You are very welcome to join us. Equally, your colleagues, associates and friends are very welcome as long as we have their RSVPs. We expect strong interest, because of the topic and the opportunity for drinks and networking.

Details: 29 April, 6:00 for 6:30, we will finish by 8:00 Texas Embassy Cantina, 1 Cockspur Street, London SW1Y 5DL

Event free, cash bar.

If you would like to join us for what will certainly be another galvanizing, enjoyable evening, please email me at kate@throughline.co.uk
